Nihmory is a game about trading. An alpha prototype with a minimalistic design approach. Tomahawk! Find a way into the labyrinth! Tomahawk! is a game about life, death and everything in between. In it, you play the keeper of a shop. The map consists of rooms, each room having certain limitations on what you can do and how many items you can keep, but the shop is a safe space. The room's system of rotations and shifting sequences gets progressively more complicated, so you need to stay on your toes. But you have a friend in the game with you, and she'll help you out. But you'll have to do your own part, and just as you are getting into the rhythm of the game, someone else will be trying to do their part for you. Tomahawk! is an adventure game. It is difficult to describe why exactly. As a programmer, I have the tendency to just make it and make it all the way through. I don't really think of the game as a product, but rather as just a set of mechanics. You can't think of the game as a game only after you've experienced it, but it is a game only by virtue of the rules that the player is supposed to follow.

I have tried to have the player experience the game before the rules are fully set in stone, and see whether he can go through the mechanics. Sometimes it works, but more often than not, the player can barely finish the game. When I started developing Tomahawk!, I tried to make some theory to describe the mechanics. Unfortunately, I failed to do it all the way through, so I was not able to fully achieve what I had set out to do. The game is hard to explain, and even harder to describe, and no one will ever be able to completely understand it. So I'd like you to simply play the game and experience it for yourself.
