What's new in Re:Award -More Corridor 1-:

RoboDojo is an independent music and comedy social network, with an independent philosophy and concept for the future, where interactions between musicians and fans are much more than just a digital forum for musicians to promote their music online. RoboDojo tries to challenge misconceptions about what it means to be an artist, and promote equality by reaching out to fans that see artists as people that they would want to be cool with, instead of worshipers. It created a unique community for fans to interact and take part in music and music related events, while fans find it easy and fun to interact with musicians. The site also features a content review team that rates content based on the quality, while allowing content creators and artists to keep the view count of their music videos, lyrics, or news items up. The idea behind RoboDojo is to reach out and connect people in an encouraging and familiar environment, where joining is the only option, music and comedy are the only name of each other. Is it like a YouTube for DJs? Perhaps. But for the future. The RoboDojo Identity. The concept Since 2007, RoboDojo is an online platform focused on independent musicians and artists, promoting equality by reaching out to fans that see musicians as people that they would want to be cool with, rather than worshipers. The site does all of this in an independent way, by promoting a philosophy where users are born as Robodojos, and must earn a "rose" by posting content and interacting with other users. The result is that the music community is a "living room", where fans from all over the world can interact and enjoy music while supporting its creators at the same time. The whole purpose of RoboDojo is to challenge misconceptions about what it means to be an artist, and promote equality by reaching out to fans that see artists as people that they would want to be cool with, instead of worshipers. RoboDojo wants to encourage the growth of artists, as well as fans by promoting equality. As a result, artists don't have to battle out for followers on dozens of web sites, or thousands of 'internet bots'. Artists are focused on advancing their art by forging relationships with their audience, telling their stories and encouraging their fans to explore their own paths and create their own relationships. While RoboDojo encourages the growth of artists, it also wants to encourage the growth of their fans, using the experiences of both to foster positive relationships and find the
