Recent Posts Archives Categories About This Blog I'm an experienced software, game development enthusiast. I started my software development career with Macintosh, but I've mainly written Windows programs. My first commercial release was in 1987. Back then I worked for a small software company in Southern California and produced a database for financial software products. I enjoyed the technical challenge of the product and got a chance to share the growth of the company, which was something I still enjoy today. Field of the Invention The present invention relates generally to a television system and method of operation thereof. More particularly, the present invention relates to a television system capable of automatically re-tuning a viewer's television receiver and method for use therewith to eliminate blurring caused by a flicker or persistence in the video information. 2. Description of Related Art As is well known in the art, modern television systems include a television receiver which displays video information in conjunction with television sound signals over an electron beam and/or phosphor screen. Numerous standards have been established to define certain requirements for the video signal transmitted to the television receiver. One of the standards relating to the video signal is a standard set forth by the National Television Systems Committee, (NTSC). The NTSC standard requires each television frame (i.e., picture) or picture element to have a duration of approximately 16.7 milliseconds. The duration of each line of the television picture (i.e., the duration of each horizontal line) is set at approximately 700 microseconds. The standard for the number of lines per television picture is 525, and the standard for the horizontal frequency of the television picture is 15.75 kHz. The video signal is, typically, transmitted at the frequency of 1.50 MHz. With a horizontal frequency of 15.75 KHz, the video signal provides 525 lines per picture, and at the video signal frequency, a visual horizontal sweep occurs every 1/60th of a second. Thus, 525 lines per picture are
