every year, it seems, there is a new question about whether the house of representatives should or should not allow votes on gun control measures on the house floor. in this book, professors of government and law argue that members of congress should have the right to vote on gun control measures whenever they choose. they do not, however, offer a plan for what a new congress would do to actually pass any such measures. the authors assert that any proposal for gun control cannot meet the true test of being constitutional if the government can prevent the citizenry from ever being able to find out what the law is. the book also offers the public's perspective on new gun control legislation. for immediate release: october 18, 2003 - the national association of scholars endorses u.s. senate's resolution to endorse the federalist papers as our nation's national heritage washington, dc - the national association of scholars (nas), a leading organization of scholars dedicated to promoting the excellence of colleges and universities in the united states, has endorsed senator susan collins' (maine) resolution calling upon the u. senate to recognize the federalist papers as "our nation's national heritage." the resolution, which was unanimously approved by a vote of the senate committee on rules and administration on october 13, 2003, now awaits full senate consideration. if passed, the resolution would place collins' name in the congressional record for her commitment to the defense of "public debate" and civil liberties in the "excesses of the so-called 'war on terror.'" "the resolution proves that senator collins and many other prominent senators are aware that the federalist papers are an important and necessary part of american history," said michael sherrard, vice president of the nas.
